Do you want to put a face and a story to statistics?

Do you want the skills to better understand the needs of individuals?

Are you interested in working hands-on with communities and individuals to solve social problems?

Join this class for an in-depth investigation of how researchers engage in firsthand contact with participants to make meaning of our social world. This class will focus on methodologies such as field work, oral history, visual sociology, and interviewing. We will address contemporary examples of qualitative work while developing skills for conducting qualitative research in individual student led projects.

Questions? Contact Dr. Warren kamryn.warren@uni.edu